Thoughts

When I asked Joshua Martin what advice he had for future business people like ourselves about to begin a career, in regards to working with the autism community he had a great response. He said that it is imperative for companies to give back to the community. The community gives business to them, and he feels that he should give back to the community. He says that the individuals need to have jobs, and feel like they are contributing and that they have some value, and he feels that as long as the individuals are a good fit with the company, then it works.
